But it is not only about the corrupt and greedy mafia in the South African politics alone, it also highlights the network of dealers and political schemers around the world who use democracy to initiate wars to keep the markets for their weapons alive and install the leaders who support them in high offices. Holden and Van Vuuren point out with the Arms Deal it was long suspected that politically exposed individuals were receiving benefits from the offsets programme after the Arms Deal was signed. It seems trite to say these arms deals were highly publicised, for they were the bi-products of war.
