A mere tendency to endanger the public peace will not suffice to fulfil that requirement Even if he is satisfied that the public peace is likely to be endangered by the publication, the Minister must nevertheless consider whether that danger is so grave as to justify the use of so drastic a power as suspension of a newspaper. The upshot of all this is that the right to freedom of expression is not an absolute and unlimited right, but a relative right, subject to restriction and control in the light of the object of maintaining important interests of the state and society, which are regarded, in certain conditions, as taking precedence over those secured by the principle of freedom of expression.
