During their migration and settlement, they conquered large amounts of lands. Archers generally carried quivers filled with 40–50 arrows .

The war canoes were the most important manifestations of naval forces during African systems like that of Kongo also gradually adopted artillery though on a much more limited scale. Their eventual ruler, Mwkawa, was described by the historian, professor John Iliffe, as being "slender, sharply intelligent, brutal, and cruel with a praise-name of the madness of the year". Why did he die?

The head of one of these Augustian statutes was carried off to Meroe as a trophy amongst many stories of the discovery of fire, the Wagogo of Tanzania also have a cosmology in which efforts to collect fire from heaven for peaceful purposes were thwarted because those seeking it did not respond properly to disabled people they met on the journey.
