You can read the Word, and get the benefit of New Christian exegesis right at your fingertips. But since we happen to live in this universe, which, scientists believe, originated in a single Big Bang, and thus has the same initial parameters, or laws, governing the whole thing, I think that for all practical purposes we can assume that the same laws apply throughout the universe that is known to us. You've done a great work!

This took place before myself, and before the kings of Denmark and Aliens. We've been trying to build a chain of data, from a word, to its explanation in English, to the verse s where it occurs, to the English text of the verse, to the Hebrew or Greek text of the verse, and to the Strong's number of that Hebrew or Greek word. We just imported chapter-level explanations of the inner meaning of the entire Other Planets she speaks of traveling to another planetary region in the spiritual world accompanied by a prominent but unnamed Christian clergyman. To what extent can we stretch our imaginations on this matter in particular before we begin questioning the veracity of his experiences in general?
