He is currently the main researcher of several funded research projects and the Director of the International Centre for Lexicography, a research group devoted to dictionary making and theory building. A collocation is presented as an umbrella term for referring to word combinations that are typical for the kind of language in question, and which can be useful for re-use in text production or for assisting in text translation. This will provide us with a tool to easily compare the different articulations in their sublexical components. This definition remains unchanged in the edition. Ferreira-Brito, L.
